COPYRIGHT STATEMENT

The copyright law of the United States (Title 17, United States Code) governs the making of photocopies or other reproductions of copyrighted materials including foreign works under certain conditions. In addition, the United States extends protection to foreign works by means of various international conventions, bilateral agreements, and proclamations.

Under certain conditions specified in the law, libraries and archives are authorized to furnish a photocopy or other reproduction. One of these specified conditions is that the photocopy or reproduction is not to be "used for any purpose other than private study, scholarship, or research." If a user makes a request for, or later uses, a photocopy or reproduction for purposes in excess of "fair use," that user may be liable for copyright infringement.

The Columbia University Libraries reserve the right to refuse to accept a copying order if, in its judgement, fulfillment of the order would involve violation of the copyright law.

INTRODUCTORY

Practically every trade, industry, and profession now has one or more associations or cooperative organizations. We have trade associations and institutes embracing particular industries and occupations; chambers of commerce embracing representatives of many groups; the labor unions representing the different crafts; associations embracing the professions; farmers' associations and cooperatives; and a great increase in municipal and community organizations for the general advancement of the community. More than 13,000 organizations, working for the good of their respective groups, are listed in this volume.

Never before in the history of commerce has there been such willingness on the part of individuals and private organizations to unite in working for the constructive upbuilding of our commerce and industry through greater efficiency of each group of related interests. The exchange of ideas and knowledge among competitors, which would have been considered commercial suicide or pure philanthropy at the beginning of the present century, is now considered mutually beneficial and constructive, a distinct contribution to higher business ethics, and a means of advancing daily the processes of production and distribution. Men are realizing that supplying the needs of the consumer is in essence a great cooperative effort; that success in industry and commerce is based not on taking advantage of other persons but on the efficient division of labor and exchange of products. The beneficial results to the economic community obtained in thousands of instances is proof of their value.

The Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce seeks to cooperate with such organizations as representatives of the individuals that form them. They are valued contact points between individuals and the Government departments.

It is impossible to define in a title or even in a paragraph the types of organizations which have been selected for listing in this directory. The aim in preparing this seventh edition of Commercial and Industrial Organizations of the United States has been to include all such organizations as have for their purpose, first, the advancement of an industry, a trade, or a profession, and, second, the promotion of commerce and industry generally on a regional basis; that is, local, State, or Territorial. This naturally excludes organizations which are primarily for social purposes although organized under some of the foregoing classifications. The difficulty in securing a complete statement of activities and a proper measure of their importance has made it necessary to be arbitrary in selecting names for the list. There are undoubtedly a few worthy organizations which have been wrongly excluded, while, on the other hand, some of those included may be less deserving. Every conceivable precaution has been taken to present an accurate and comprehensive list without delay. It will be of material assistance in the completion of future issues if users of this directory will bring to our attention any errors or omissions.

The organizations listed represent an increase of nearly 45 per cent over the listings in the 1926 edition. It is believed that this increase represents a more complete listing rather than an increase in the number of organizations functioning, though this also has been a factor. New associations, however, have largely been offset by others which have gone out of existence or have been consolidated with some other organization. The regional scope of these organizations is shown by the listing of more than 2,000 national, international, and interstate organizations, about the same number of State organizations, and about 9,100 local organizations.

For the first time the secretaries of all national, international, and interstate organizations are listed, though it is recognized that they are subject to frequent change. These organizations are also classified by commodities and services as well as alphabetically. State and local organizations are listed alphabetically only. It was decided to omit farmers' cooperatives and other agricultural organizations because the Department of Agriculture bulletin, Farmers' Business Organizations, lists them.

If further information is desired on the activities of trade associations listed in this volume, it may be found in Trade Association Activities and Market Research Agencies, publications of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce. The first describes the activity according to trades, and the latter outlines the research being carried on or already completed on marketing problems.

Material assistance was rendered in the compilation of the directory by the Chamber of Commerce of the United States, the Post Office Department, through the postmasters of the country, and many other organizations.

The compilation was made under the direction of John A. Smith, of the Domestic Commerce Division.
